

Hout made this unprincipled assertion in answer to an IPS reporter's question about how Hout would explain the support to the PLO by Saudi Arabia's reactionary King Faisal, a stooge for the Rockefeller oil cartels. Despite catcalls from journalists at the mention of Rockefeller's name, Hout responded fully to the question, stating that the definition of Faisal was "debatable" and that the Arab people were united around the cause of Arab nationalism. Earlier Hout characterized his classless, CIA-style movement as a "national liberation movement, neither rightist or leftist."

The response of the suave and practiced counter-revolutionary Hout was in marked contrast to the hysterical reactions of two East German correspondents after the press conference. Angrily scolding the IPS correspondent, this duo ranted: "You are making trouble here....You are making trouble for progressive people.... This is the UN. You have to act like a correspondent here." When the IPS correspondent reminded these East bloc representatives that New Solidarity was a political newspaper and therefore it was necessary to ask political questions (instead of the usual nit-picking), the East German "Marxist" snapped: "Then you shouldn't be here."

CANADA'S NATIONAL DEFENSE COLLEGE HOLDS INFORMAL POLICY MEETING WITH SOVIETS

Nov. 13 (IPS)--Top government and military leaders from Canada's National Defense College met today with the Soviet delegation to the United Nations, in an informal session designed to help break Soviet resistance to Rockefeller's genocidal population and food control programs.

Major-General Edwards, the College's commandant, told IPS reporters in an interview yesterday at his New York hotel that the Defense College members discussed the World Food and Population Conference and invited the Soviets to make policy suggestions and criticisms of Canada's grain offer of one million tons. In this way, the College develops psychological profiles of Soviet and other government officials. As Edwards put it, "We are interested in what they think our position should be and what they think of the position we have already taken. We are interested in getting an idea of how others see us. This was an informal chat."

The College functions to indoctrinate top Rockefeller operatives and provide them with psychological profiles of officials from other governments, especially Soviet bloc nations, so they are qualified to "deal" with them. Participants in the year-long college course include military, governmental, business, and church leaders from the U.S., Canada, and the United Kingdom. Companies previously represented at the College have included such Rockefeller affiliates as Dupont, IBM and the oil companies.

Most of the Defense College time is spent abroad, with frequent visits to Yugoslavia. In 1970 they received what they term a breakthrough, an invitation to meet with their equivalent school in Romania. This year they hope to visit Poland and the USSR, as well as numerous non-Communist countries.

When the College visits an East bloc nation, Edwards said, his group is first briefed by the Canadian and other "friendly" ambassadors. "After we learn what the real situation is, we like to hear them [the East bloc countries] say what the situation is."

Using material from their course, College participants write proposals for implementing Rockefeller's policies. Asked what specific proposals have been made, Edwards, who began his job in August, 1974, complained that he has been "too busy" to read last year's proposals. Pinned down to name specific course participants and lecturers, Edwards tapped his forehead and feigned memory loss.

OAS REFUSES TO LIFT SANCTIONS AGAINST CUBA;
ROCKY'S MESSAGE TO CASTRO: CRAWL LOWER

NEW YORK, N.Y., Nov. 13 (IPS)--A heavy psychological blow was delivered to the socialist regime of Fidel Castro this week, as the Organization of American States (OAS) refused to lift economic sanctions against Cuba at the OAS foreign ministers meeting in Quito, Ecuador.

The refusal came just as Fidel thought his months-long efforts to crawl back into Nelson Rockefeller's Latin American "family of nations" were about to bear fruit; Cubans were confident that the repeal of sanctions was a sure thing. Rockefeller intends to use the engineered rejection to further "break" the island, before attempting to include it in his fascist economic structure.

The crowning irony is that Cuba was refused admittance to an organization that Rockefeller is about to junk as incompatible with his plans for further slave labor development of Latin America. The demise of the OAS was an explicit theme at Quito, where Costa Rican Foreign Minister Facio, a Rockefeller counterinsurgent who has been the leading pro-Cuban organizer in the OAS in recent months, told the conference the OAS was "out of date."

Rockefeller does want Cuba to take part in Latin America's slave labor future. His Commission on U.S./Latin American Relations (CUSLAR) recently recommended "reintegrating" Cuba into a "constructive pattern of inter-American and international relations." This new pattern--regional slave labor "development" projects--requires the scrapping of the OAS and the elimination of overt U.S. participation in Latin American politics.
