

Terror Expert: BRD Terror Will Definitely Continue

This interview with a prominent university professor and self-proclaimed "expert analyst of trends in terror" was made available to the Executive Intelligence Review shortly after the Sept. 5 kidnapping of West German industrialist Hanns-Martin Schleyer.

The professor discussed his qualifications as an expert on terrorism, citing both his participation in a number of conferences on terrorism and his extensive contact with the European university strata which often functions as the support networks to protect terrorists in Europe. In the excerpts of the interview below, the professor describes the terrorists as "radical" and "socialist," the standard line currently used by terrorist controllers to legitimize terrorist activity as "antifascist resistance."

Q: Do you have a new evaluation of the Baader-Meinhof group and West Germany's ability to handle terrorism, following the kidnapping of Schleyer?

A: Yes. It is clear that the Baader-Meinhof group is more highly organized and considerably larger than had previously been recognized by the Germans. The West German government believed that they had contained the situation and had arrested most of the terrorists. They even told the public that the Baader-Meinhof terrorism couldn't happen. It is now clear that they don't know who all of the people in this organization are or the extent of their activity. They have, in short, made a major mistake. These are highly trained intelligent individuals who are capable of organizing, planning, know how to get weapons and materials necessary for fulfilling their objectives. They obviously have access to foreign funds, and definitely have training programs outside the country.

Q: What are their overall objectives and goals?

A: The organization is devoted to radicalism and socialism, which is reflective of the outlook of the younger generation in the country today. I think their long-term objective is to bring about a change of government in Germany, or a change in social political attitudes more reflective of their socialist outlook. They can be compared to the Spartacist revolutionaries in the 1920s, who used the same violent terrorist tactics to bring down the government. Once this younger generation comes into power there are going to be major changes, more socialization of industry and services. You have to look at the German political spectrum from its own frame of reference, which developed out of the turn of the century period; what would be considered a liberal here in the U.S. would probably be looked on as very conservative in Germany.

Q: Where do you see the Baader-Meinhof terrorism moving in the future; are there any clear trends in their activity?

A: Well, it is definitely going to continue. It looks like they are moving toward the targeting of industrialists, banks and prominent individuals, very much like the developments of terrorist organizations in Brazil several years ago, where the terrorists began kidnapping and actually executing major industrial figures from foreign countries if their demands were not met. I think this is going to be a major threat to all prominent industrial figures and banking officials in Germany at this time.

Andreotti - Communist Party Collaboration Target Of Terrorist 'Hot Autumn'

On Sept. 5, the executive of the Italian Communist Party (PCI) issued a sharply worded warning that forces among the extreme left and certain (Fabian) networks among Christian Democrats and the trade unions were moving to provoke a "violent autumn" of unprecedented proportions this year. The warning followed on the heels of a series of provocations launched by hundreds of fascist "autonomisti" youth at the annual PCI-organized Unita festivals in Milan and Trieste, as well as provocative announcements by Fabian trade-union leaders of their intention to mobilize the mass of 650,000 unemployed Italian youth this fall as the battering ram to topple the alliance between the PCI and the Andreotti government.

The agreement between the PCI and Andreotti has become the prime target for those Wall Street and London investment houses typified by Lazard Frères and represented in Italy by Enrico Cuccia, president of the giant Mediobanca. This Cuccia-Lazard circle, with its historic control of "left extremist," Socialist Party, and Christian Democratic networks, is deploying to collapse the Andreotti cabinet or maneuver it into a controlled environment by some time this fall. The leading tactic employed — as throughout the rest of Western Europe — is terrorism and social disruption.

While the Milan daily Corriere della Sera has taken to accusing the PCI of "paranoia" for construing everything as an attack on the party, the general secretary of the Italian Socialist Party (PSI) and the vice-president of the ruling Christian Democratic Party (DC) have both begun to denounce the DC-PCI governmental alliance. Last week, the vice-president of the DC (and leader of that party's "Base" faction, founded by Cuccia), Giovanni Galloni, reversed his former position and issued a scathing polemic against the PCI as a party biding its time to stab the DC in the back. The following week, Galloni was echoed by PSI general secretary Bettino Craxi, who, in much the same terms, warned in the pages of Le Monde against the PCI's "Machiavellian" intentions. The consummation of the DC-PCI alliance in the so-called "historic compromise," Craxi threatened, would be met with the fullest resistance and denunciation by the Socialists.

With the DC "Fabian" wing, typified by Galloni, attempting together with the PSI leadership to isolate the PCI and Prime Minister Andreotti politically, a campaign is being organized by the most notorious corporatist in the trade-union movement, Giorgio Benvenuto of the national UIL confederation, to mobilize the mass of 650,000 unemployed Italian youth against the joint PCI-government economic program.

On Sept. 6, Benvenuto announced his campaign for a nationwide anti-unemployment drive aimed directly against the legislation worked out by the government in conjunction with the Communists to deal with the problem. A counter-statement was immediately issued by PCI Central Committee member Cervetti, warning that the "autonomisti" will be used in this youth mobilization to generate a "hot autumn." Already, the "autonomisti" have been deployed into the PCI's Unita festivals, attacking PCI members by the hundreds in Trieste and Milan. Benvenuto's campaign to exploit the rage of Italy's unemployed youth is expected to take off with a bang later this month, when a repeat of the Bologna riots of earlier this year is scheduled to take place in the very heart of PCI-controlled territory.

The full gamut of the fascist extraparliamentary left in Italy, from the Lotta Continua Maoists to the luridly fascist "Indians," is scheduled to hold mass demonstrations in the "Red City" of Bologna for a period of three days beginning Sept. 22 as a sign of protest against the "sell-out" PCI. When riots were staged at the city university earlier this year, armored cars were brought in by the local PCI government to deal with the thousands of Maoists and provocateurs shipped into the city by the trainload. The riots were then quickly subdued when Bologna's workers collaborated with the police. This time around, the Bologna riots are planned as only the first step in a campaign; the momentum is to be picked up and carried by the dregs of the trade-union movement through the offices of Giorgio Benvenuto. The daily Repubblica, controlled by Cuccia's ally Giovanni Agnelli of FIAT, has already published the first three installments in a series of articles by the notorious City of London flunkey Giorgio Bocca (a Socialist fellow-traveller) designed to give the "autonomisti" provocateurs the cover of legitimacy. Characterizing the "autonomisti" as "impoverished and tough Leninists," Bocca urges their cooperation with the trade unions in order to "solve" the problem of youth unemployment — by generating terrorism and chaos throughout the country.

French Steps Toward Terrorist Crackdown

The government of France has recently undertaken a crackdown on terrorist networks and training grounds located on French soil. In large part, the crackdown is a feature of the French thrust for economic cooperation with West Germany, and has included a belated effort to locate terrorist figure Klaus Croissant, wanted in West Germany and living in France in recent months. It has also included raids on the psychiatric clinics and "agricultural communes" operated as terrorist-selection centers on French and contiguous territory by Interpol and coordinating British-based and other intelligence networks.

But to date, the French government has been impeded in its current crackdown by evident infiltration and contamination of government offices and police forces by the same, identified intelligence networks associated with the international banking operations of the Chase Manhattan and Lazard Frères groups.

Nevertheless, and French crackdown is real, and coincides with other indications that European governments may soon take the action required to stop terrorism for good. Its first salvo was fired in mid-August, with the publication of exposés in the conservative southern paper, Le Méridional, targeting a number of "agricultural communes" concentrated in the southeast of France as obvious terrorist training centers. With connections and support from the Club of Rome's Sisco Mansholt, Swiss banking, and the United Nations' "Food and Agricultural Organization," communes in France's Ardeche Department such as that of Forcalquier, and others in France, Switzerland, and Austria named by Le Méridional, were the source of the Corsican and Basque "autonomist" terrorist movements which are controlled by agencies resident in London and associated with the British crown.

On Sept. 1, the "liberal" daily Le Monde protested that the communes, as "experiments" in returning to nature, were threatened by "rumors" such as those circulated by Le Méridional. Nevertheless, the French government this week issued an arrest warrant for one Pierre Conty, founder of a "commune" in the Ardèche region which functions as part of the overall network of training grounds. An all-out mobilization of available police forces from Lyon, Grenoble, and Montpellier is underway in the area to find Conty, whose fingerprints were found on a pair of glasses in an automobile used to carry out an Aug. 25 hold-up of the Crédit Agricole (agricultural credit bank) in Villefort, in which one policeman and two passers-by were killed. Another member of the commune is also wanted as a witness in the killings.

This week the government also decided to suspend state funding for a clinic at the Saint-Anne psychiatric hospital known as Etienne Roussel. This clinic, which will shut down as a result, is roughly the French equivalent of the Lincoln Detoxification clinic in New York, where drug addicts have been brainwashed and turned into the police-killers of the Black Liberation Army. Saint-Anne was itself started shortly before World War II by Jacques Lacan, a "psychologist" who trained many of France's leading Maoists at the Ecole Normale Supérieure in time to play a role in the May 1968 uprising against De Gaulle.

Lacan, who has taught at Saint-Anne for four years,
