

The Anglo-American kooks behind the Jewish settler movement

by Joseph Brewda

Speaking in the Israeli Knesset (parliament) on Feb. 28, Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin heatedly denounced Baruch Goldstein and his cronies at the Jewish Defense League (JDL) settlement of Kiryat Arba who were responsible for the Hebron massacre of over 50 Muslim worshippers on Feb. 25. "The murder came out of a small and marginal political context. He grew in a swamp whose murderous sources are found here, and across the sea; they are foreign to Judaism," he stated. "To him and those like him we say: You are a foreign implant. You are an errant weed. Sensible Judaism spits you out. You placed yourself outside the wall of Jewish law. You are a shame to Zionism and an embarrassment to Judaism."

One day earlier, the JDL issued an international press release in New York praising Goldstein's "martyrdom." "Goldstein's gunning down of 64 Arabs in the Cave of the Patriarchs in Hebron on Friday and wounding over 300 more, was an act of sanctification of G-d's name, an act of self-sacrifice for the Jewish people," the statement read. "On the Eve of Purim, the Holiday celebrating the salvation of the material destruction of the Jews in ancient Persia, Baruch Goldstein sent a modern prophetic message to the enemies of today's embattled Jews. . . . The Jew who dies to save the lives of his people is taken alive into Heaven and is spared the pangs of Purgatory."

An "errant weed" in Judaism? Outside of Jewish law? To be sure. But who planted this weed, and where was it cultivated?

In fact, the Jewish "settlers movement" of which Goldstein was part, which has been killing Arabs for years, is a wholly owned creation of British intelligence. It is an extension of the Zionist network of Vladimir Jabotinsky, the British agent who founded the Irgun terrorist movement, and his protégés including the late Prime Minister Menachem Begin, former Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir, and would-be dictator Gen. Ariel Sharon.

A masonic conspiracy

The Zionism represented by Jabotinsky et al., and the settlers movement today, can be traced back to the Kabbalah, the Jewish mystical heresy which the Babylonian priesthood had imposed on Mosaic Judaism in the first centuries of the Christian era, and which was later patronized by the Venetian oligarchy. This branch of Zionism, at least, has always been dedicated to destroying Islamic and Christian holy sites, creating a paganized Judaism practicing animal sacrifice at a rebuilt Temple of Solomon in Jerusalem, and fostering the generalized religious warfare in the region that its masonic sponsors view as necessary to bring on Armageddon.

Although these elements within the Zionist movement were always dedicated to this pagan objective, it was only after the Israeli Army seized control of East Jerusalem and the West Bank in 1967, where many of the key Islamic and Christian holy sites are located, that their gameplan was put into motion. In that year, Asher Kaufman, an operative of London's Quatuor Coronati freemasonic lodge, arrived in Jerusalem to oversee an assault on Jerusalem's holy places, both Christian and Islamic.

There are two phases of this masonic assault. One, with which the settlers movement has been most associated, is the rebuilding of Solomon's Temple on the Al-Haram Al-Sharif (Noble Sanctuary) in Jerusalem, currently the site of the Al Aqsa and Dome of the Rock mosques. This is what the Masons and the Kabbalistic crazies call the "Temple Mount." Upon his arrival, Kaufman began sponsoring "archeological work" related to rebuilding the temple, destroying the Islamic holy sites and building a religious-terrorist network.

Another phase of the assault, seen in the recent massacre, is a plan to take over or destroy all Islamic or Christian holy sites in Israel and the Occupied Territories. The Kabbalists want the Cave of the Patriarchs, the reputed tomb of Abraham currently administered by Muslims, exclusively for themselves. As for the Christian sites (currently all administered by the Roman Catholic or Orthodox confessions), they are slated to fall under the control of the Ministry of Religious Affairs, and, de facto, the Anglican Church and allied masonic orders.

Within Israel, the idea of rebuilding the temple and destroying the Islamic holy places had long been advocated by Rabbi Abraham Isaac Kook, the first Chief Rabbi of Israel and the spiritual leader of Jabotinsky's Irgun. In 1921, Kook formed the Torat Cohanim Yeshiva in Jerusalem, seizing control of the Al-Haram Al-Sharif in order to rebuild Solomon's Temple. This obsession with Solomon's Temple, which was destroyed in 586 B.C., derives from the Old Testament report that King Solomon was associated with a project of introducing various Babylonian cults into Judaism.

The Masons claim to have built the temple.

The founding document of Kook's yeshiva (Jewish day school) makes clear the connection between Jabotinsky's Zionism and Kabbalistic paganism. It reads in part: "In this epoch of national awakening, in the face of the temporal and material elements that have taken hold of the [Zionist] movement, an establishment such as this is of paramount importance. The main pillar of our present revivalism is based on a deep-seated hope of old to see once more the priest and Levites performing their sacerdotal rites. God's message concerning the rebuilding of the temple and the renovation of the sacerdotal rites will certainly be fulfilled very shortly."

Kook's son, Rabbi Zvi Yehuda Kook, carried out his father's tradition. He promptly became a key ally of Kaufman in the plot against the Al-Haram Al-Sharif begun in 1967, and he simultaneously deployed his followers to open up the Kiryat Arba settlement outside of Hebron, and charged them with taking over the Cave of the Patriarchs.

One of Kook's most important protégés was Rabbi Meir Kahane, the founder of the JDL. Another top protégé was Rabbi Moshe Levinger, the founder of the associated Gush Emunim (Bloc of the Faithful), the political heir of Kahane and the spiritual leader of the Kiryat Arba settlement responsible for the Hebron massacre.

The history of the so-called Jewish settlement movement, which is in the public record and has been the subject of EIR exposés and those of Israeli journalists, shows that that movement has always been dedicated to fulfilling the objectives of the British Masons and their Kabbalistic pawns.

Seizing Abraham's tomb

Kiryat Arba, the 5,000-man settlement outside of Hebron that Goldstein was from, was established in 1969 two years after the Israelis seized the West Bank from Jordan. Primarily occupied by members of the JDL/Kach movement and the Gush Emunim, Kiryat Arba was the first, and remains the most important, settlement on the West Bank; it has always been committed to a Jewish war with Islam.

Plans to build the settlement as a means of taking over Hebron and Abraham's tomb were first announced by Rabbi Zvi Kook in the weeks prior to the 1967 war. "Where is Hebron?" he raved. "Do we let it be forgotten? And where is our Schechem [Nablus] and our Jericho? All of Transjordan is ours. Every single inch, every square foot belongs to the Land of Israel." Within a year of the war, Kook deployed one of his more rabid and violence-prone students, Rabbi Moshe Levinger, to the outskirts of Hebron, to settle it with Jews and to prepare to expel the Muslims. By 1969, some 40 families had begun the settlement.

In 1973, Levinger and Kook formed the Gush Emunim, dedicated to the proposition that Eretz Israel (the Land of Israel) included all the territories seized, and that the Torah forbade the Jews from ever giving these territories back to Muslims. In 1977, Kook also became a patron of Kahane and his Kach movement, and endorsed Kahane's campaign for the Knesset. Following the assassination of Kahane in New York in 1990, the Kach movement/JDL fell under the control of Levinger and his Gush Emunim.

In 1979, Levinger and Kook became upset that the Camp David Accords with Egypt would mean the relinquishment of the territories. That year, the Gush Emunim/JDL decided that the best way to sabotage the accords would be to bomb the Dome of the Rock.

In 1980, the same group met at the Kiryat Arba home of Gush Emunim activist Menachem Livni to conspire to assassinate several West Bank Arab mayors for the same reason: to sabotage any peace with the Arabs. Three of these mayors were severely maimed in separate bombings planned in June. In July 1983, Levinger's son-in-law led a Kiryat Arba team that sprayed the Islamic College of Hebron with machine-gun fire, killing three students and wounding 30 more.

Earlier, in 1982, Levinger had set up the Hebron Fund, in order to provide a financial conduit for U.S. Zionists to buy up Hebron and the Cave of the Patriarchs, Muslim-free. Among its prominent contributors were Canadian real estate operatives, the three Reichmann brothers of Olympia & York, and Marc Belzberg, all front-men for the Meyer Lansky-linked Bronfman family. One of the Reichmann brothers and a Bronfman would later serve on the board of the Hollinger Corp., as would former U.S. Defense Department official Richard Perle, who was also an activist with the fund.

The campaign to drive the Arabs out of the territories continued, with the support of the government, then led by the Jabotinskyite Yitzhak Shamir, and the same Lansky and Bronfman-linked American mobsters who have always patronized the settlers movement.

In April 1984, Levinger's son-in-law and others attempted to blow up Arab buses in East Jerusalem, in order to trigger riots. The attempt failed, and several of the terrorists were arrested. The JDL/Kach movement then established a legal defense fund in the United States; most of the $100,000 that was raised was contributed by Lansky's former bagman Charlie Fox. Following their conviction, where the 18 defendants received moderate sentences, then-Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir praised the terrorists as "excellent people who made a mistake."

Rebuilding Solomon's Temple

Simultaneous with its conspiracy against the Cave of the Patriarchs in Hebron, the settlers movement was also deployed to destroy the Al Aqsa mosque and Dome of the Rock mosque at the Al-Haram Al-Sharif.

In 1978, two disciples of Rabbi Zvi Kook, Mattiyahu Dan and Rabbi Shlomo Aviner, established the Ateret Cohanim (Priestly Crown) Yeshiva in the Muslim quarter of occupied East Jerusalem. Both Dan and Aviner were officers of Israel's domestic intelligence service Shin Bet, and were deployed by Ariel Sharon.

The stated purpose of the yeshiva was to train rabbinical students in the animal sacrifice that would be reinitiated at the new Temple of Solomon that would be rebuilt following the destruction of the Al Aqsa mosque and Dome of the Rock. In 1980, Dan established the Jerusalem Reclamation Project to buy up the Arab quarter of the city in order to make Jerusalem Muslim-free. Also in 1980, Kahane and his associate Andy Green, another associate of Goldstein at Kiryat Arba, were arrested for plotting to blow up the Dome of the Rock.

In 1982, Dan et al. began to tunnel secretly under the Al-Haram Al-Sharif, as part of their preparations for destroying the Islamic holy site. Also in 1982, a JDL member named Alan Goodman walked onto the Al-Haram Al-Sharif and began firing on worshipping Muslims, killing one. Kahane paid for the legal fees.

In 1984, the Chief Rabbi of Israel, Avraham Chana Shapira, another Kook protégé, endorsed a fundraising letter of Ateret Cohanim. That same year, the so-called "Lifta gang," a JDL/Gush Emunim cell, was rounded up after its members tried to place 30 pounds of dynamite at the site. Also in 1984, Irving Moskowitz of Florida, a board member of the Ateret Cohanim, founded the American Friends of Ateret Cohanim to provide a funding channel for these terrorists. Contributors included Belzberg and Cyril Stein, a top figure in the British gambling syndicate. Endorsers or speakers at the dinners for the U.S. money conduit have included Malcolm Hoenlein, the director of the Conference of Presidents of Major American Jewish Organizations, then-Israeli President Chaim Herzog (today a member of the Hollinger board), Likud Chairman Benjamin Netanyahu, Ariel Sharon, and Sharon's close friend, New York District Attorney Robert Morgenthau.

Yet another part of the terror apparatus is the Temple Mount Faithful of Gershon Solomon, a disciple of Jabotinsky and an Irgun veteran who had run the youth department of Menachem Begin's Herut party. Leaving the Herut over the Camp David agreement, Solomon helped form the Tehiya party in 1979, at the suggestion of Rabbi Zvi Kook, together with Yuval Neeman, the former head of Israel military intelligence, and Geula Cohen, the longtime side-kick of Shamir who had first brought Kahane to Israel. In 1986, the group held a prayer meeting on the "Temple Mount," triggering Muslim riots. In 1990, the group made another attempt against the Al Aqsa mosque, sparking riots that left 20 Muslims dead.

Among the groups' controllers is Stanley Goldfoot, an Irgun veteran from South Africa who oversees much of the terrorist apparatus in the Occupied Territories. Goldfoot had earlier organized an archeological expedition under the Al-Haram Al-Sharif, with the sponsorship of the Christian evangelicals who advocate rebuilding the temple to hasten the second coming of Christ. Led by Terry Reisenhoover and Douglas Kreiger, the group's Temple Mount Foundation works closely with Kahane's high school chum and JDL founder, U.S. Air Force intelligence's Joe Churba.

Ariel Sharon: profile of a British tool

by Joseph Brewda

Would-be King of Israel Gen. Ariel Sharon (ret.) exemplifies the type of Anglo-American agent that operates among the most expansionist circles within the Israeli elite today. Since 1967, Sharon has been assigned the task of fostering the expulsion of the 1.6 million Palestinians from the Occupied Territories which Israel seized that year. He remains a major patron of the Kiryat Arba assassins and related Jewish crazies, and is currently deployed to wreck the Israel-PLO accords. London and New York are considering making him, or perhaps one of his cronies, ruler of Israel.

Sharon's involvement with the settlers began immediately after the 1967 war. Then a general in the Israeli Army, Sharon immediately deployed armed Jewish "settlers" into the West Bank under the pretext of creating a "defense perimeter." This was the beginning of the policy of making the Occupied Territories "Arab-free." From the outset, Sharon was involved in sponsoring the 1969 creation of Kiryat Arba; he has publicly praised that settlement's spiritual leader, Rabbi Moshe Levinger, as a "true hero of Israel."

Creating the settlements

In 1972, the Israeli government lifted a ban on the private purchase of West Bank land by Israelis, following the lobbying efforts of Yehezkel Sahar, a former minister of police and Sharon sidekick. Their first project was the construction of a residential area outside of Jerusalem for retired Israeli Defense Forces officers. One partner in the scheme was Moledet party leader Gen. Rehavam Zeevi, another Sharon associate and long-term Jewish Defense League controller.

In the years 1972-76 there was a steady increase in West Bank land purchases, especially by firms linked to Mossad officer Rafi Eytan, Sharon's aide. One project was a partnership of Eytan, Sharon adviser Eli Landau, and Avraham Mintz, a leader of Levinger's Gush Emunim, in founding the Eilat Morah settlement.

In 1973, Sharon was told to leave the military and to enter politics, in order to mobilize the Israeli population on behalf of the Anglo-Americans expansionist policy. The orders came from Meshulam Riklis, the New York-based owner of Rapid American Corp. who remains Sharon's primary controller. Riklis had been a Hebrew school teacher in Minneapolis until he was picked up by Anti-Defamation League leader Burton Joseph in the 1950s. Under Joseph's patronage, Riklis amassed a fortune, briefly controlling Investors
