

LaRouche's HBPA Is 'Uniting the Nation'

by Ingrid Torres, LaRouche Youth Movement

As U.S. state legislatures opened on the first of the year, and Citigroup and other banks and corporations were forced to reveal even deeper losses and layoffs, the collapse of the global economic and financial system has become more and more evident, and city and state elected officials are responding more seriously than ever before to the LaRouche Political Action Committee's call for a Homeowners and Bank Protection Act (HBPA). The Act, which has to be passed by Congress in order to become law, would freeze home mortgages, while protecting charter banks that serve local communities. But with Congress currently under the thumb of banker Felix Rohatyn's Nancy Pelosi, the speaker of the House, it is incumbent upon state and local officials to take the responsibility for action. Lyndon LaRouche discussed at length how the HBPA would work in his Jan. 17 webcast (see Feature).

Here are updates from the week of Jan. 14:

- In New Jersey, LaRouche PAC organizers recruited four new signers on a resolution supporting the HBPA. One of the city councilmen, from East Orange, when briefed on the national mobilization, said: "Your movement is linking us all around the nation." In Paterson, one woman underlined the personal dimension of the foreclosure crisis: "In trying to pay our mortgage, we can no longer afford to live."

- Pennsylvania added five more cities that have endorsed the call, bringing its total to 31. LaRouche PAC has set a goal there of 50 cities in the near future. Shamokin is a city of 8,000 people, and is the third municipality in Pennsylvania that has passed the resolution in the Congressional District represented by Democratic freshman Congressman Chris Carney. The second is the city of Connellsville, which is in Democratic Rep. John Murtha's district; Wellsboro is in Republican John Peterson's district. Carbondale and Coatesville passed the HBPA on Jan. 14. All the cities and towns that have passed the resolution in the state represent more than 2.5 million people.

- In Indiana, East Chicago's City Council unanimously passed the HBPA resolution. That area represents more than 30,000 people.

- The Providence, Rhode Island, City Council, representing more than 176,000 people, passed the HPBA unanimously. As soon as city councilmen knew that the resolution was going to be introduced, 15 of them signed up to co-sponsor it.

- In New Hampshire, two state representatives, Barbara Hull Richardson (Cheshire) and Barbara French (Merrimack), have filed an HBPA resolution.

- The Flint, Michigan, City Council unanimously passed the HBPA. Flint, under the devastating effects of deindustrialization and the shutdown of the automobile sector in the state, has been suffering a loss of population, but it still represents 124,000 persons.

What Does This Mean?

As LaRouche has emphasized, we need a national firewall to protect the general welfare. The issue is not just the deflation of the mortgage bubble, but the collapse of the whole system. And that means not only intervening to stop foreclosures, but also to protect chartered banks, as a first measure to reorganize the whole economic system, to create a New Bretton Woods system, with fixed currency exchange rates.

LaRouche was asked in his webcast how much time would there be to deal with the banks after intervening to stop foreclosures. LaRouche answered: "I would say about ten seconds. By the time the effect of that hits the banks, you would begin to get an effect you don't want."

States cannot issue credit to save the banks, but they can burn their Congressmen's asses to get them to do so. They can intervene on the side of their constituents, to represent their interests.

It is past time for Congress to act. If it doesn't, and fails to serve the needs of the lower 80% of income brackets, it will be its fault that the United States goes down, and the whole world with it.

As the late Mexican President José López Portillo once said: "It is time to listen to the wise words of Lyndon LaRouche."

Violent Video Games Incite Teen Violence

L. Rowell Huesmann, Ph.D., of the University of Michigan, has reviewed more than 50 years of research on the effects of violent media on young people. His study was published in the Fall 2007 issue of the Journal of Adolescent Health, in an article entitled "The Impact of Electronic Media Violence: Scientific Theory and Research."

Huesmann shows that violent video games are a major public health threat, and a leading contributor to violent behavior. In fact, of a list of correlations of each of ten major public health threats with the behavior which heightens each threat, only the correlation of smoking with lung cancer narrowly exceeds the correlation of violent media, especially video games, with violent behavior.

The study grabbed international media attention when published. Dr. Huesmann warns that video game units, which are now in 83% of American homes, have significant long-term effects. Under the heading, "Desensitization," he writes, "Repeated exposure to emotionally activating media or video games can lead to habituation of certain natural emotional reactions. This process is called 'desensitization.'" He continues, "the effects on stimulating long-term increases in violent behavior should be even greater for video games than for TV, movies, or Internet displays of violence."

Dr. Huesmann concludes, "The evidence ... is also compelling that children's exposure to violent electronic media, including video games, leads to long-term increases in their risk for behaving aggressively and violently. ...

"One valid remaining question is whether the size of this effect is large enough that one should consider it to be a public health threat. The answer seems to be yes" (emphasis in original). The article is available at www.jahonline.org/article/PIIS1054139X07003916/fulltext.

Don Phau interviewed Dr. Huesmann on Dec. 21, 2007.

EIR: In your study on the effects of violent media, you single out video games. Do you consider video games more effective in provoking aggressiveness than other media?
