Italian Election Fraud Leaves Rockefeller, Agnelli Vulnerable

June 25 (NSIPS) — Proceeding with a pre-announced computer scenario intended to establish “ungovernability” as the all-pervading fact of Italian political life, FIAT financial-industrial emperor Gianni Agnelli, with the direction and aid of Rockefeller U.S.-based “private” intelligence agencies, rigged the June 21 Italian general elections. Increasing the vote of the Atlanticist wing of the ruling Christian Democrats (DC) and the Atlanticist-led Communist Party (PCI), Agnelli arranged wholesale vote fraud against the three principal anti-Atlanticist forces in the country: the Mancini wing of the Italian Socialist Party (PSI), the European Labor Party (ELP), and the anti-Rockefeller DC faction of Budget Minister Giulio Andreotti, which lost parliamentary seats amid the overall increase in DC strength.

The intended immediate result of the election rigging is political chaos. Because the DC, under the whip of Rockefeller-Agnelli stooge Ugo La Malfa and “private U.S. citizen” and former Treasury Secretary John Connally, conducted its campaign on a strictly anti-Communist basis, it is now impossible for the DC to agree to governmental participation by the PCI, the only possibility for a majority government coalition. By significantly “punishing” both the PSI, whose leader Mancini has been in the forefront of Italian resistance to Rockefeller banks, and the pro-development Andreotti faction in the DC, a DC-PSI coalition for an anti-Atlanticist government does not appear to have a sufficient electoral base.

The manufacture of this “ungovernability” set the stage for major Rockefeller-Agnelli operations aimed at crushing the anti-Atlanticist forces and rushing Italy into fascism. Were Italy alone in its plight of catastrophic indebtedness to the New York banks, and were the European Labor Party’s small but critically influential cadre not present, this police-state scenario associated with terrorism and related insurrectionary wrecking operations against Italy’s political institutions would have a high probability of success.

As it stands, there remains enormous potential, based on the willingness of PCI workers to rally to a development program demonstrated by the ELP campaign and the growing international movement toward a new world economic order, for an immediate post-election drive by pro-development forces to crush Agnelli and usher Italy out of the collapsing dollar empire altogether.

The Vote Fraud

Working through the Interior Ministry under Francesco Cossiga, an Agnelli intelligence operative, Gianni Agnelli with the aid of U.S. agencies had a Honeywell computer programmed to produce precisely that improbable pattern in “vote returns” which Agnelli-linked press identified well in advance as necessary to ensure a condition of “full ungovernability” in Italy. Honeywell is the U.S.-based corporation owned by Sperry Rand, a major financial angel for Marcus Raskin’s Institute for Policy Studies’ global terrorist networks, used by Agnelli throughout the election period.

The Honeywell program directed the Honeywell computer to interpret the votes of the Italian population for two specific ends. First, a significant blow was directed at anti-Rockefeller PSI leader Giacomo Mancini. The PSI, which left itself open by failing to campaign publicly on a competent development program which Mancini is otherwise known to support, lost 2 per cent of its electorate, falling from an approximately 12 per cent vote in 1975 regional elections to 10 per cent on the June 21 Interior Ministry print-out. Second, the ruling DC was granted a 3 per cent absolute vote increase in an ostensible “mandate” to continue in power but stay clear of the Communists. With the meddling hand of former Texas Governor John Connally, operating in tandem with Rockefeller’s Foreign Intelligence Advisory Board through his own Citizens’ Alliance for Mediterranean Freedom, the DC was cajoled into basing its campaign almost exclusively on anti-communism.

Simultaneously, the Honeywell computer granted the Italian Communist Party under CIA agents Enrico Berlinguer and Giorgio Amendola a significant relative victory by increasing the PCI vote to 35 per cent, only 3 percentage points below the DC. The Berlinguer-Amendola clique, in continuous consultations with Agnelli at the Rome Institute for International Affairs, campaigned on a demand that they be admitted to the government to implement a fascist austerity program dedicated to payment of Rockefeller debts (the so-called historical compromise).

The vote granted to all smaller parties was miniscule, but Rockefeller’s own Republican party under Ugo La Malfa, whose percentage of the vote remained stable and maintained this wrecking crew’s credibility for optional use in a likely minority government.

The European Labor Party, whose campaign exercised powerful direct influence on PCI working-class supporters and a catalytic influence on the action of the Mancini-Andreotti forces, was granted a tiny fraction of its expected votes, despite the confirmed public estimates of all sources that in an honest election, the party was likely to win at least one seat in the Chamber of Deputies — the equivalent of 80,000 votes.

The ELP overall received a mere 5,435 votes, well below the lowest predictions of even the contrived straw-polls of the Agnelli press. The fraud was in fact so blatant in Turin, a major northern industrial center of considerable ELP strength and powerful campaign presence, that the ELP votes actually decreased as more and more polling places reported. With returns in from 1291 precincts, the ELP had 588 votes; when 1574 precincts had reported, the ELP had 690 votes; with returns in from 1645 precincts, the ELP vote suddenly plunged back to 587!

Notably in those areas outside of Turin, Milan and Rome, areas where the ELP did not campaign, Rockefeller-Agnelli neglected to arrange a fraud with the result that a surprisingly large vote, indeed greater numbers of votes were reported than in the regions of heaviest ELP support and organization!

In the national returns, the Sperry Rand-Honeywell computer broke down for a significant period during the vote count — enabling analysts to get returns for a time directly from reporting precincts. These unlauded returns were sent out over national news media. The media, however, suddenly began wildly contradicting this “direct precinct” reportage of several hours’ duration, sharply adjusting their vote reports precisely at the point that the Honeywell computer started operating again. The contrast is typified by the Turin vote-juggling in the ELP case.

In response, the European Labor Party will present the hard evidence of fraud in Italian courts of law. The ELP suit will contain the demand that the election be invalidated, and a new honest election held, with full details of the exposure and legal action being made public at a press conference in Rome today.

The Chaos Scenario

The Rockefeller-Agnelli group now has several precarious options they can pursue toward a police state and genocidal austerity.

Barred by its Honeywell “mandate” from forming a majority government with the PCI, the Christian Democracy cannot form any majority government at all abiding by the election results. It does not have sufficient strength either alone or in coalition with any conceivable array of minor parties to form a government. It is certain therefore that a minority government will be formed — or as the Agnelli press has repeated daily for weeks, a situation of “full un governability.”

The most likely solution according to press sources associated with Gianni Agnelli is a minority government between the DC and La Malfa’s Republicans, with a technocrat as opposed to a politician assuming the premiership. Corriere della Serra, La Stampa and Il Giornale have editorialized in favor of such a technocratic solution, with Nino Andreatta the most common name mentioned in connection with the premiership of such a government.

Andreatta is not a politician. He is a pro-fascist private intelligence operative and retainer of Gianni Agnelli, among whose non-political accomplishments may be listed his role in founding Trento University, the brainwashing center through which the murderous Red Brigades terrorist gang and other intelligence agency countergangs (Lotta Continua, et al.) were produced. Such organizations are now being deployed for the Rockefeller-Agnelli current insurrectionary operations against the Italian Republic.

More recently, Nino Andreatta functioned as Agnelli’s economist in drafting the overtly fascist austerity program submitted to the government on behalf of Premier Aldo Moro. The program is fully endorsed by the intelligence agents dominating the Berlinguer-Amendola Central Committee of the PCI.

Other Italian press, notably Agnelli’s Repubblica, have reported on the probability of a deal between Moro and other political factioneers. Such an arrangement constitutes a second Agnelli option. In one version of this deal, Moro would assume the Presidency of the Chamber of Deputies, PCI parliamentary fraction leader Paolo Bufalini would assume the Presidency of the Italian Senate to display PCI support “without portfolio” for a DC austerity government, with the Premiership going to an Agnelli operative, Francesco Cossiga, the current Minister of the Interior.

For a period of weeks Cossiga has effectively functioned as head of the Italian government in exercising extraordinary police powers called into play by Rockefeller-Agnelli destabilization operations during the pre-election period.

Cossiga, the cousin of PCI leader Berlinguer, is implicated as an indictable defendant in Agnelli’s Red Brigades and related terrorism, which he has used to flood terrorist hit areas and cities with Carabinieri special police, creating martial law conditions. Cossiga has exercised these police-state powers since the early May earthquake disaster in the Friuli region of northern Italy, which provided a pretext for NATO occupation of the region in conjunction with population control operations coordinated by his Interior Ministry. The supervision of election rigging through the computer was Cossiga’s immediate responsibility.

A Temporary Solution

Whatever the solution selected for an Italian government, it will be regarded by Nelson Rockefeller and Gianni Agnelli as identical to the temporary solutions represented by the Bruening and Von Papen governments of 1931-33 Germany, the intended outcome — the establishment of a fascist state.

According to the same Agnelli press sources which report the various minority government options, any coalition will be permitted to rule for only a brief period, in a climate of escalating Agnelli-controlled terrorist deployments of the sort which have disrupted Italian political life for months. It will be followed by a “then-justified” military take-over or other form of police state, or less likely, a PCI entry into the government to police a broken working class preparatory to an avowedly fascist regime, as in more “Chilean” type models.

Target: Mancini

Significant follow-up operations are now being directed by Rockefeller-Agnelli operatives to isolate and crush the principal pro-development forces in Italy, most importantly Giacomo Mancini and his hegemonic pro-development faction in the PSI. To date, the response of Mancini to these overt wrecking operations against his party have been dangerously naive.

Ricardo Lombardi, a PSI left faction leader and a Rockefeller-Agnelli operative since the post-World War II days of Allen Dulles’ Action Party, has announced through a factional lieutenant, Claudio Signorile, the formation of a “Movement of Opinion” in alliance with Il Manifesto, a countergang whose split from the PCI in the late 1960s was orchestrated by Agnelli’s Cattaneo Institute. The new movement is seen by Rockefeller as an umbrella group for countergang mobilizations around fascist “quality of life” issues, and is publicly intended as a wedge to convert the PSI as a whole into such a “Party of Opinion” emphasizing “quality of life” and “civil liberties” issues (e.g., for abortion, military “democracy,” prisoners’ rights, homosexual rights, etc.) — the sort of program currently promoted by Italy’s “Radical Party,” an Agnelli-spawned operation which garnered 2 per cent of the vote in the June 21 Interior Ministry computer print-out.

Were Giacomo Mancini to capitulate in any way in terms of program to this Lombardi maneuver, the PSI would be quickly destroyed as an anti-Atlanticist force in Italy.

In a public statement published in Corriere della Serra, Italy’s newspaper of record, Mancini denounced a “technocratic” government and called instead for a DC-PSI (Mancini-Andreotti) coalition; simultaneously, however, he stated that the PSI lost votes because of its failure to ally with the Radicals, who had sought such electoral alliances before June 21. Mancini’s ingenuous statement was made after several Agnelli newspapers editorialized to the effect that the PSI vote setback was due to the party’s loss of its image in association with the so-called democratic liberties — ex-PLICITLY referencing the grab-bag of fascist "small group" self-interest demands put forward by the Radical Party.

A complementary source of pressure on Mancini is reflected in an article yesterday signed by Guiffreda in the PSI's own Avanti newspaper. If the PSI does not become a "fighting force" around "quality of life" issues associated with the subversive Lombardi "Movement of Opinion" tactic, the article warns, then the "lumpenproletariat" will rise up on their own "as they did in 1968." The Italy of which Guiffreda was writing was not 1968, but the Italy of 1922, of Mussolini's March on Rome.

Related feature articles on the "degeneration" of Italy's youth have been carried in Corriere della Sera in the days following the elections, and Agnelli's Repubblica has reported that contrary to the government's pre-election admissions, Italy's real unemployment rate has now been acknowledged at 2,000,000, or more than triple the former number, by ISTAT, Italy's bureau of labor statistics.

Mancini is thus being offered the carrot of a fascist "quality of life" program of his own, or the stick: the spectre of fascist mobs ravaging the nation.

ELP Emerges Strong

From Wiesbaden, West Germany, Lyndon LaRouche, the Presidential candidate of the U.S. Labor Party, has issued a statement identifying the obvious course of action available to Mancini, Andreotti and other pro-development forces. "Now above all other times, is the time to move to mobilize all of Italy behind you! . . . Now is the time to move in the way we have discussed earlier," LaRouche advised. "At this time, since Nairobi and the Vancouver Habitat conference, a majority of the developing sector's population is on the verge of declaring an immediate financial debt moratorium . . . Do not be afraid of what Rockefeller might do in reprisal . . . the entire Atlanticist monetary system will go. Once that occurs, the U.S. (minus Henry Kissinger at State) will be leading the pack of nations establishing a new world economic order based upon the International Development Bank."

As LaRouche specified, the ELP campaign turned a plurality of regular PCI-supporting workers to the ELP in Turin and Milan, garnering many votes as well from areas well outside the party's areas of organized penetration. The ELP campaign decisively demonstrated the wisdom of ELP recommendations for action to Mancini et al. by demonstrating that the bunch of scoundrels who head up the Communist Party are actually in the midst of a hemorrhaging process and cannot control or claim the true loyalty of Italy's working masses. A clearly defined campaign now by pro-development political forces, adopting the ELP debt moratorium and development program, would rapidly steal away the working class from the PCI leadership, and deal the Rockefeller-Agnelli machine a blow from which it need never recover, placing Italy in the forefront of the push for a new world economic order.

The Agnelli-Rockefeller decision to defraud the tiny ELP of its vote perfectly well signifies the potential that now exists. One or two ELP deputies in parliament, the quite probable result of an honest election, would not only have given the ELP the sort of organizational visibility which would be extremely dangerous to the mass-base field organizations of the PCI, but would destabilize Berlinguer's control over a significant number of PCI parliamentary deputies, otherwise decisively altering the balance of parliamentary powers by catalyzing pro-development sentiments of these and DC and PSI deputies as well. Rockefeller, Agnelli, Cossiga, et al. determined to defraud the ELP for fear of the DC, PSI, and the working-class base and dissident cadre of the PCI, sufficient proof of what now can and must be done.

The ELP is launching an organizing drive to consolidate its actual voter-strength throughout Italy, with the included objective of setting up new local chapters in the area south of Rome to Naples where, despite no ELP campaign presence, the absence of vote fraud revealed significant voter support to the extent that "invisible" organizers for the ELP not now formally associated with the party inevitably exist.
