

'It is your presidency they are assaulting'

by Lyndon H. LaRouche, Jr.

The following statement has been released to EIR News Service by A LaRouche Exploratory Committee: Committee to Reverse the Accelerating Global Economic & Strategic Crisis. It is the Foreword, dated March 24, 1994, to a booklet, "Assault on the Presidency," which is about to be released to the public. The booklet, containing all the "useful facts" to which Mr. LaRouche alludes below, will be available from the LaRouche committee's headquarters at P.O. Box 730, Leesburg, Virginia, 22075. See p. 56 of this issue for additional intelligence on a protagonist of the scandal-mongering against President Clinton, British "journalist" Ambrose Evans-Pritchard. Subheads have been added.

On or about Oct. 1-3, 1993, the weekend the restive Russian parliament was shot down by an artillery barrage, a section of British intelligence prepared to launch a destabilization of the elected government of the United States. Weeks were required to prepare the articles to be used to launch this foreign-directed operation against our government. It was over two months before the first public signal of the operation was launched through a British asset in the United States, the magazine known as Emmett Tyrrell's American Spectator. It was another month, immediately after retired Adm. Bobby Ray Inman exposed the affair at a Jan. 18, 1994 press conference, before the prepared operation of which the admiral spoke was launched full force by complicit sections of the daily U.S. news media.

It would be a misleading half-truth to say that those attacking President Clinton were political allies of former British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and her U.S. dupe, former U.S. President George Bush. No doubt, some leading Republicans and others were lured into playing a foreign government's filthy game by their own political opportunism. Neither any set of facts, nor anything as innocent as ordinary dirty partisan politics was the origin of what has come to be known as the "Whitewater Affair."

Clinton's potential threat to London

The immediate issues behind these British intelligence attacks on our elected government included what London views as President Clinton's threats to frustrate Britain's shamelessly open support for its Serbian war-criminals assets in the Balkans, and, more important, the President's potential threat to oppose Britain's insistence on IMF "shock therapy" for Russia.

In December, the American Spectator magazine, a confessed and documented British asset, went to press with the first version of London's "Clintongate" caper.

Put to one side all the complicated explanations of the Moscow events of early October 1993. The bottom line was, that the Russian people were being driven to the breaking point of rage by the social effects of an economic breakdown which was caused almost entirely by the Anglo-American insistence on "shock therapy" and "IMF conditionalities." On the surface, at least, nearly every faction visible in Moscow was working as hard as possible to seek to come to terms with the United States, but it was becoming increasingly difficult for any of them to find a tenable middle ground between the social crisis building up within the abused Russia population and the fanatical demands of the International Monetary Fund.

Let the Washington Bush-leaguers chatter all they might about "democracy" and "free trade" in Russia. The social and political blow-back of continuing the Thatcher-Bush geopolitical dogmas was leading in the opposite direction, possibly even a thermonuclear one. The Russia events of early October and their aftermath were very worrying. Clinton State Department official Strobe Talbott summed up the White House's worried reaction when he was quoted widely as saying on the subject of U.S. Russia policy, "less shock and more therapy."

No sane observer could honestly reject the proof we present here, that the author of the "Whitewater Affair" is a major component of the British foreign intelligence service. Kissinger crony Conrad Black's Hollinger Corp., the owner of the London Daily Telegraph, has created and directed the "Whitewater Affair." From the beginning, it has operated through its controlled assets in the American Spectator and its Washington, D.C. correspondent Ambrose Evans-Pritchard.

Hollinger is the current name for a corporation which was founded and run by British intelligence during World War II, known then as War Supplies, Ltd., co-headed by Conrad Black's father. This was, and is a corporate flagship cover for the wartime British MI-6's Canada-based Special Operations Executive operations, founded by Winston Churchill and Lord Beaverbrook, and headed by the famous Sir William Stephenson. Its current board of directors and advisory board read like the top ranks of British foreign intelligence service, including publicly confessed British foreign-intelligence asset Henry A. Kissinger.

As soon as we take into account that this is the faction of British intelligence which owns Henry A. Kissinger, which is close to former Prime Minister Thatcher, and close to the disastrous former U.S. President George Bush, it is not difficult to identify the differences in policy which motivate Hollinger to launch this sort of attack on the White House. During most of 1993, U.S. policy was pretty much Thatcher-Bush policy running on auto-pilot; President Clinton had not challenged that policy in a threatening way. In the autumn, at the point London worried that President Clinton might be thinking of taking U.S. foreign policy off the Thatcher-Bush track, Hollinger went berserk.

What that does not explain is the ferocity, the fanaticism, the desperation, the hysteria of the British daily press's behavior. Now, the full political range of the British press is screaming for Clinton's impeachment daily: far left, left, right, far right, and center: the Daily Telegraph, the London Times, the London Financial Times, the London Guardian, and so on. As the British say, "The lot."

Meanwhile, behind all the fire and "Whitewater" from the British daily press and its U.S. dupes, none of the scandal-mongers has managed to put forward a charge with facts to match. The "Whitewater" story, from last December to the time we go to print with this report, has been the product of a gutter journalist groping wildly in search of an unknown fact. Yesterday, it was that. Today, it is something else. Tomorrow, who knows what it will be? As we go to print, the press has provided no credible corroboration for even one of the scandals with which it has charged the President.

Watergate, at least, or the Iran-Contra Affair, or "the Bushes of Silverado" started with a few solid facts worth investigating. On Clintongate? So far, as the lady said on TV back in 1984, "Where's the beef?"

The behavior of British intelligence is much more than dirty partisan politics. It is worse than hysteria. It is Shakespeare's Lady Macbeth madly roving the midnight halls of her doomed castle.

Sirens are blowing for the banks

Pick up the financial pages. The biggest financial bubble in the history of mankind is threatening to burst. Some of the world's biggest banks, and the biggest speculators, are virtually being carried into bankruptcy court on ambulance stretchers. There is a smell of doom throughout the world's financial markets. The fact is, this global financial and monetary system, as it has been built up since the dollar crisis of August 1971, is about to collapse. Nothing can stop the collapse of this system in its present form; it is no longer a question of "Whether?" but only of "When?"

The British Empire is a ghost story. The pile of post-industrial rubble which comedians might describe as the British economy is near the condition, that to fly out of London one must reserve a rumble seat on Lady Thatcher's broom. It is said, that those whom the gods would destroy, they first make mad. The last vestige of an empire is about to be flushed into the relevant cesspool of global financial collapse; the British intelligence services' press, heirs of a lost empire, have gone mad.

The global financial crash is now inevitable. It might happen this week, next, a year from now. It will happen, and soon. That bubble will probably burst during President Bill Clinton's present term of office. The best news is, George Bush is no longer President.

The present global financial system can not be saved; the only practical question is, can the U.S. economy survive the inevitably early death of this IMF, Federal Reserve financial system? The short answer is "Yes." The catch is, President Clinton must act according to the precedent set by the first President of the United States, George Washington, and his Secretary of the Treasury, Alexander Hamilton.

Under Article I of our U.S. federal Constitution, with the consent of the U.S. Congress to necessary emergency legislation, the President of the United States can create a new U.S. financial and monetary system overnight, virtually with the stroke of a pen on the relevant piece of emergency legislation. For the sake of our nation, and for the welfare of all of our citizens and our posterity, we need to have a U.S. presidency intact which is ready and able to do that; we need to have a President who is willing and able to do that when the crisis hits.

We can not permit a pack of hysterical London freaks to destabilize our U.S. presidency, or interfere with the functioning of our elected President.

Read the following chapters. You will also find the appendices useful. The most essential facts your neighbor needs to know are there.