

Nero on Display

On April 11, 2009 Lyndon LaRouche shocked the world by diagnosing President Barack Obama as a narcissistic Nero personality, who had no sense of reality but a drive to exert power to feed his own sense of self. Keep this man in power in the Presidency, LaRouche emphasized, and you are courting absolute disaster, not only for the United States, but for the world.

Today, two and a half years later, increasingly, policymakers in Washington and around the world are shocked at how accurate LaRouche's diagnosis was—as Obama plays out his Nero-like personality on a grander and grander scale. No sane person who looks at the matter closely can refute LaRouche's evaluation. The question remains: Will leading circles in the United States find the courage to remove Nero-Obama from power, before the consequences doom us all?

Obama is outdoing himself almost daily with his flamboyant display of Nero-like arrogance. Take a look at just this last week:

Obama chose to celebrate Veterans' Day by presiding over the first college basketball game—North Carolina vs. Michigan State—ever on the deck of a nuclear aircraft carrier, the USS Carl Vinson in San Diego. Why the Vinson? Because it was the ship that carried the body of Osama bin Laden to his burial at sea after he was killed by Navy SEALs in a raid ordered by Obama. Obama crowed about that assassination as he strode triumphally onto the deck wearing a brown bomber jacket. This is the President who had his entire security cabinet join him in a real-time viewing of the execution of bin Laden—in an eerie replay of Hitler's similar habit after the execution of his opponents.

Obama then traveled to Hawaii for the Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation (APEC) summit, where he exerted his arrogance toward the leaders of Russia and China, the intended victims of the thermonuclear confrontation that his London controllers are planning.

According to Russian sources, in his meeting with President Medvedev, Obama spent his time lecturing the Russian leader, and responded to questions about his Administration's unilateral moves toward a missile defense system in Central Europe, by accusing Medvedev of "carrying water for Putin."

The bigger show came with China, where Obama not only reportedly berated President Hu Jintao on currency issues in their private meeting, but then proceeded in his press conference after the summit, to declare that China should act like a "grown-up" and revalue its currency upward, because "the U.S. and other countries feel that enough is enough."

Pathetic and insane, you might say, but unfortunately it's a lot more serious than that. Deadly serious. Obama, a British puppet, is presiding right now over a rapidly escalating confrontation with Russia and China, both in the Asia-Pacific region per se (see the new military base deal in Australia), and in the new Balkans, called the Middle East. As indicated even in their public statements, the Russians and Chinese are well aware of what Obama is doing, and they are not prepared to capitulate to his Nero-like demands. The confrontation is coming on fast.

Is Obama going to back down? Did Nero ever back down? He did commit suicide, eventually, but that is no solution. No, our present-day Nero has to be stopped by the readily available political means of Section 4 of the 25th Amendment to the U.S. Constitution, and impeachment.

It's time to give up your illusions and your cowardice, and act.
