

The British Take a Big Hit

LaRouche's war against the British Empire has reached a new, most critical, and promising, phase. With the victory in Kesha Rogers' Congressional campaign, he and his associates have hit the enemies of the United States on a flank that they didn't expect, and they still aren't quite sure what hit them. They don't really know how to react—but the shock waves are spreading internationally.

Most critically, this blow against the British comes in the immediate aftermath of LaRouche's effective salvo on the Brazil flank, when he blew the whistle on the bankruptcy of Banco Santander on Feb. 1. With that hit, LaRouche refocussed his assault on the core of the British imperial financial monster, the Inter-Alpha Group, an enemy of the United States and the world, which he had first attacked, although not by the same name, for its fascist deprecations against Brazil almost 40 years ago, in his debate with the Keynesian, Abba Lerner. Now the situation is more ripe—and LaRouche's position vastly strengthened. The major British counter-operation to LaRouche's Four Powers (U.S.A., Russia, China, India) agreement, the BRIC (Brazil, Russia, India, China), has suffered a major blow, and now a significant inroad has been made within the body politic of the United States as well.

We know these Brits are doomed—and we are rubbing the reality in their faces. What's crucial now is that we use our current situation to force through the impeachment of British puppet Obama, and then the global Glass-Steagall and LaRouche Plan, which will finish off the British Inter-Alpha Group that is behind him. Because that's the only way we Americans will prevent the Brits from taking us down with them.

The press coverage of Rogers' victory reflects the fact that the media are not sure how this war is going to turn out, and they are trying to play it safe. The coverage is unusually prompt, extensive, and serious—especially reflected in the fact that many of blogs have included one or two paragraphs from the LaRouchePAC release in their coverage, and some are including links to Kesha's website.

As for the British, notably the London Economist, they are upset and obsessed with the fact that it is they who are under attack. They make jokes, which are not quite jokes—which only underscore their vulnerability to our attack. They don't dare not mention the fact that we are out to destroy the British.

We know that there are some circles, like the rabid David Axelrod and his friends, who are just chomping at the bit to go berserk against Rogers' victory, but for the moment, they are being restrained by those who realize that such action would be another self-destruct. Not to be overlooked is the fact that other circles around the institution of the Presidency are actually debating the potential for impeaching Obama—in an environment where the victory of a "Democrat who called for impeachment" is the topic to discuss.

So, it's time to get serious. Patriots must move immediately to impeach the President who represents the major obstacle to implementing the global Glass-Steagall, by mobilizing the mass-strike ferment which, due to LaRouche's leadership, just succeeded in delivering a stunning blow to our nation's only enemy. We have the unique responsibility to lead this upsurge of patriots. In this context, LaRouche's next webcast, on March 13, takes on even more importance.

Does not the Ides-of-March doom of Obama seem even closer today?
