

The British Monarchy's 'Green' Opium War Against the Americas

by Dennis Small

July 18—In late June and early July, the British monarchy engaged in a multi-front assault to seize and control territory and routes vital to establishing Dope, Inc., as the unchallenged economic and political power in the Americas, and to flood the United States with narcotics, just as the British did in their Opium Wars against China in the 19th Century.

This assault is one feature of the international crusade by the British monarchy and its pawns to depopulate the planet down to some 2 billion people, and to destroy the very existence of the sovereign nation-state. In the Americas, North and South, they have deployed the World Wide Fund for Nature (WWF) of Nazi Prince Philip and the late (formerly card-carrying) Nazi Prince Bernhard of the Netherlands, as well as the international narcotics enterprise and its prominent enforcer, George Soros, to bring about the conditions of a New Dark Age—with special targetting of their historical enemy of centuries, the United States.

It is this global reality which explains recent dramatic “electoral” developments in Honduras, Argentina, and Mexico.

On June 28, the pro-drug-legalization President of Honduras, Manuel Zelaya, was deposed on orders of the nation's Supreme Court, Congress, and Attorney

The British monarchy and financial circles have been running the drug trade from the top down since the 19th Century. EIR's underground bestseller (1992 edition shown here) traced it right up to the modern corporate boardrooms of the City of London and Wall Street.

General, for violating the Constitution. On that same day, Argentina held mid-term elections, which saw former President Néstor Kirchner defeated in a congressional race by the multi-millionaire Francisco de Narváez, who has documented links to one of the country's top drug-runners. And in Mexico's mid-term elections on July 5, there is strong evidence of large drug money flows into the northern state of Sonora, to throw the gubernatorial election there against the expected victor, Alfonso Elías Serrano, of the PRI party.

Go with the Flow

To understand these events, begin by looking at Figure 1, showing the major flow of illegal narcotics from South America, up through Central America (including Honduras), then into Mexico, and from there into the United States. Ninety percent of the drugs entering the U.S. are transshipped through Mexico. This includes cocaine coming from Colombia, Peru, and Bolivia; ephedrine and other chemical precursors for the production of methamphetamine, from Argentina and elsewhere; heroin from Colombia, Guatemala, and Mexico; and so on.

Over the last couple of years, Soros, who was trained by the Nazis in occupied Hungary during his youth, has escalated his long-standing campaign to bring about the legalization of drugs internationally. One of his targets has been Argentina, where the Supreme Court is expected to rule imminently on the legality of possessing drugs for “personal consumption.”

As Justice Minister in the government of President Cristina Kirchner, Aníbal Fernández has been the most vocal advocate of drug legalization. In early July, he was promoted to the post of Presidential Chief of Staff, from which position he has threatened and bullied anyone—including Argentina’s Catholic Bishops Conference—who opposes legalization.

Fernández will be a featured speaker at an international conference hosted by the Argentine Congress Aug. 6-7, to push the legalization agenda. Not surprisingly, the conference is formally sponsored by central elements of what Lyndon LaRouche has denounced as “Anglo-Dutch Liberal Imperialism”: the British and Dutch embassies in Buenos Aires, Soros’s the Open Society Institute, and the Soros-sponsored Latin American Commission on Drugs and Democracy.

In Argentina’s June 28 mid-term elections, the Colombia-born multi-millionaire Francisco de Narváez, under investigation for ties to drug-trafficking cartels, as well as money-laundering and other financial crimes, managed to narrowly defeat former President Néstor Kirchner in the province of Buenos Aires.

De Narváez is a media magnate, but his reported connections to the drug underworld may be his undoing. Argentine Federal judge Federico Faggionato Márquez is currently investigating de Narváez’s ties to “Ephedrine King” Roberto Segovia, currently jailed for trafficking eight tons of ephedrine to Mexico. De Narváez hasn’t been able to explain how or why Segovia received calls from a cell phone registered in de Narváez’s name, or why he and Segovia share the same lawyer.

De Narváez sits atop a vast financial empire which, according to more than one investigator, is made up of numerous shell companies registered in other family members’ names, and located in offshore tax havens. Although a member of Congress, he has failed to file a declaration of his assets for the past two years, as required by law. The daily Página 12 reported July 5 that the U.S. Treasury’s Financial Crimes Enforcement Network (FinCEN), is investigating him for cover-up and laundering of money derived from criminal activity.

Although both ex-President Néstor Kirchner and his wife, current President Cristina Kirchner, have been soft on the British agenda of drug legalization—perhaps because of the financial muscle that Soros and his Dope, Inc. masters wield in and against Argentina—they are nonetheless considered by London to be a serious obstacle to their strategic objectives, having imposed a partial moratorium on the country’s usurious foreign bond obligations, and having expressed their desire to implement an FDR-style approach to economic development.

The de Narváez win, reeking of drug dollars, is being pumped by London as the beginning of the end for the Kirchners . . . and Argentina.

And in Honduras . . .

As Argentina was being subjected to Dope, Inc. assault, Honduran President Zelaya was encouraged to make a bold move to execute a de facto coup d’état on behalf of the drug interests. Zelaya had publicly joined the Soros legalization bandwagon in October 2008, and in June 2009 he moved—with the vociferous backing of Venezuelan President Hugo Chávez's "Bolivarian" apparatus in the region—to try to illegally change the Constitution so as to allow his own reelection. Fortunately, Honduran institutions such as the Supreme Court, the Congress and the Attorney General thwarted the coup, and deposed Zelaya from office instead, shipping him out of the country.

When Chávez and others—egged on by President Obama's reckless, unconditional support for Zelaya's unconstitutional action—attempted to militarily reimpose Zelaya, by flying him back into the country on a Venezuelan plane, cooler heads fortunately prevailed. Secretary of State Hillary Clinton quickly met with Zelaya in Washington, and insisted on third-party negotiations, to be conducted by Costa Rican President Oscar Arias, which are ongoing at this time. Zelaya is calling on his followers inside the country to launch an "insurrection," including blockades of major highways.

Chávez, blocked for the moment, has been hollering to anyone who will listen, that Secretary Clinton is to blame, and that President Obama has to overrule her policy and reinstate the pro-drug Zelaya.

If Obama follows that advice, he will be implementing a British-sponsored policy—as he is already doing on so many other fronts—whose objective is to destroy the United States, in this case, with a flood of legalized drugs.

Soros: 'The Lord of the Skies'

Possibly the most dramatic recent "electoral" intervention in Ibero-America by Britain's Dope, Inc.—and the one which reveals most starkly the guiding hand of the British monarchy and empire—is the case of Mexico's northwestern state of Sonora.

On July 5, Mexico's mid-term elections saw the opposition PRI party sweep the country—except in Sonora. There, according to local activists, Dope, Inc. deployed some $50 million to defraud the PRI gubernatorial candidate, Alfonso Elías Serrano. Soros ran cover for this operation by deploying his stable of NGOs to run a smear campaign against Elías and his ally, the current governor, Eduardo Bours, also of the PRI. Elías had campaigned throughout the state on the strategic urgency, for Mexico as a whole, of building the PLHINO, the Northwest Hydraulic Plan, which LaRouche has long promoted as vital for both Mexico and the United States.

Bours is also a strong promoter of the PLHINO, and has earned the enmity of the drug cartels for resisting their efforts to take over Sonora—a state which they consider vital in their drug shipment corridors to the United States—and also for supporting Mexican President Felipe Calderón's battle against drugs, even though he is of the opposing PAN party. In fact, when a purported spokesman of the Michoacán Family drug cartel went on the radio July 16 to offer the Calderón government a "pact" to stop the violence they have

George Soros's decades-long campaign to legalize narcotic drugs is closing in for the kill, with the Mexican state of Sonora a crucial battlefield. Here, Soros (right), meets with officials of the Organization of American States in Washington in 2006.

British WWF and Dope, Inc. Target Mexico

Prince Philip's WWF (now called the World Wide Fund for Nature) is grabbing 30% of Mexico's total territory to set up "green" zones outside Mexican sovereignty.

WWF and Dope, Inc. (See Figure 2.)

Here's how Dope, Inc. deployed in Sonora, through the networks financed and run by kingpin George Soros:

With Elías leading by 20% in the polls a month before the elections, a daycare center in Hermosillo, Sonora, subcontracted out by the Federal government, suspiciously burned to the ground on June 5, with 48 children burned to death as a result. The drug cartels had threatened just such action in other states one year earlier. Immediately, Soros's leading NGO in the state, Sonora Ciudadana, went into high gear, blaming Bours and Elís, by implication, for the deaths.

Sonora Ciudadana was created as an offshoot of one of Soros's Open Society Institute's leading projects in Mexico, the national NGO called FUNDAR. FUNDAR and its Sonora branch share directors and projects, and are financed officially by the Open Society Institute. Sonora Ciudadana also works directly with the WWF (about which, more below), in an environmental network targeting the Sonoran-Arizonan border.

Heading Sonora Ciudadana is a prominent journalist from the state's El Imparcial daily, Guillermo Noriega Esparza, who, interestingly enough, publicly thanked the U.S. consul in Hermosillo, Sonora, John unleashed across the country—the standard “choose between silver and lead” narco strategy of blackmail—Bours promptly issued a statement backing Calderón's rejection of the offer, saying: “The national pact is the Constitution; there cannot be any pact other than that.” He added: “I've said it time and again: Independently of possible differences there might be, on matters of public security, we must close ranks around the President.”

So, the British monarchy set itself the twin tasks during the Mexican elections of stopping the PLHINO and securing Sonora for Dope, Inc.'s trafficking routes. This, as part of their years-long drive to make Mexico a virtual colony of the British Empire. The two principal agencies they deployed on this mission are the Breidenstine, for inviting him to attend Obama’s inauguration in January.

Two other organizations in the Soros stable that joined the contrived fracas of demonstrations and ads against Bours and Elís, are LIMAC (Freedom of Information Mexico) and PRENDE (The Press and Democracy Foundation), both recipients of Soros funds.

Then there is a hard, more operational side of Soros’s involvement in Mexico, which features direct control over nine critical airports in Mexico’s Southeast (Figure 3)—the crucial ports of entry from Central America for drugs being shipped through Mexico to the United States.

Soros and his partner, the wealthy Mexican financier turned “businessman” Fernando Chico Pardo, founded a venture capital firm called Promecap in 1997. Promecap advertises itself as a financial advisor to Soros’s Cayman Islands-based Mexico Strategic Investment Fund (MISF), and functions as a vulture fund, buying up distressed corporations’ non-performing debt. Included in Promecap’s purchases is the Grupo Aeroportuario del Sureste, or ASUR, which owns and manages nine tourist- and drug-dominated airports of southeast Mexico, including Cancún and Cozumel.

Given his control of nine vital Mexican airports, perhaps Soros should be bequeathed the nickname made famous by the now-deceased Mexican drug kingpin Amado Carrillo: “Lord of the Skies.”

Fernando Chico Pardo was also on the board of Soros’s Quantum Fund as of 2005, and he is currently the chairman of the board of PRENDE, the Soros journalistic operation involved in the campaign in Sonora.

Slim and the WWF: ‘Natural’ Allies

Here, around the activities of Fernando Chico Pardo and his brothers Jaime and Luis, we encounter one of the more visible overlaps of London’s Dope, Inc. apparatus, with its WWF—the leading global promoter of genocidal environmentalism, run personally by Prince Philip.

Chico Pardo, in addition to his Soros partnership, has long been known as the right-hand man to the world’s sometimes richest man, Carlos Slim, Mexico’s most prominent fat cat and founder and chairman of the telecommunications giant Telmex.

Chico Pardo, who was reportedly worth a billion dollars in 2004, got his start as a banker working for the drug-linked British bank Standard Chartered, Salomon Brothers, and Mocatta Metals. In 1991, he joined the board of Slim’s holding company, Carso, and has served there continuously to the present. Brother Jaime Chico Pardo is chairman of the board and president of Telmex. Jaime is a 1974 graduate of the University of Chicago’s Booth School of Business—notorious as George Shultz’s den, where he hatched the fascist Pinochet project for Chile—and is, today, chairman of the America Council of the Booth School.

But the Chico brothers are small potatoes for Slim. His true strategic alliance is directly with the World Wildlife Fund.

Slim’s Telmex entered into a strategic partnership with the WWF in 2003, which was vastly upgraded in June 2009—just one month before the Mexican elections. On June 4, Carter Roberts, the president of WWF-International, travelled to the Mexican resort of Cozumel, to sign an agreement for the creation of a $100 million public-private fund, to be run by the WWF, which is to limit human activity and preserve biodiversity in six “priority” regions, covering no less than 30% of Mexico’s total territory. Slim provided half—$50 million—of the fund’s financing.

The intent of the WWF’s fund is to extinguish Mexico as a nation, by imposing anti-development environmentalist criteria and denying Mexico the sovereign right to develop its own territory. One of the WWF’s main Mexican targets is the PLHINO project, which they claim would “waste” water by employing it for agriculture!

It is highly instructive to overlay the regions which the WWF intends to run through its new fund—the Gulf of California, the Chihuahuan Desert, the Mesoamerican Reef, and forest projects in Oaxaca, the Monarch Butterfly reserve in Michoacán and the State of Mexico, and the southernmost state of Chiapas—upon a map of the principal drug traffic routes in and out of Mexico. The strategic impact of the project thus comes into clear focus (Figure 3).

The agreement for the fund, signed by WWF-International President Carter Roberts, WWF-Mexico director general Omar Vidal, Mexican Minister of Environment and Natural Resources Juan Elvira Quezada, and Carlos Slim, was held up as a model for the kind of partnerships the WWF intends to replicate globally.

WWF-International’s Roberts maniacally proclaimed that “the dream of our movement is that in a very important country we would have the leadership throughout the government, the private sector, the civil sector and the scientific sector. And, finally, here we have everything.... This initiative, with so many individual communities, NGOs, and more, is one of the most important things in the world. It is a moment in which the stars are aligned, and this is a great moment.”

This agreement exemplifies the bitter reality identified by U.S. patriot and proven friend of Mexico, Lyndon LaRouche, that Mexico, a noble nation of freedom under President José López Portillo (1976-82), has been reduced to a colony of the British Empire today. Mexico must be freed, and we must help free it, LaRouche reiterated recently, both in defense of its sovereignty and to stop London’s “green” Opium War against the Americas.
