From the Managing Editor

We devote nearly all of this issue to our continuing coverage of the April 13-14 Schiller Institute Conference in Germany, this week, concentrating on three areas: “The Hope for the Future,” “The Future of Eurasian Cooperation”; and the international campaign for Glass-Steagall, focused on the United States, where the breakthrough against the British imperial monetarist system, now in its death throes, has to be made.

The issue begins with a Strategic Overview, “There Is an Alternative to the Empire’s War & Terror,” by EIR Editor Nancy Spannaus. The bloody atrocity just committed in Boston is part of a global escalation of war, chaos, and terrorism, by the British empire, in a frantic effort to crush the only alternative to its genocidal plans, namely the growing support for Glass-Steagall, led by the LaRouche political movement.

Our Feature presents the stark contrast between what is, and what can be, as the theme which carries through the four conference speeches focused on the future: Alexander Nagorny, a Russian historian and editor, discusses the “Strategic USA-China-Russia triangle; Kirill Benediktov, editor of Terra America (Russia), and Jason Ross of 21st Century Science, made it clear why there is no time to waste in developing a Strategic Defense of Earth. “Otherwise,” said Benediktov, “humanity will continue to play Russian roulette with the Cosmos”; and former Assistant Attorney General Bruce Fein discusses what must be done to “make civilization worth preserving.”

Next, are two speeches from the panel on Eurasian cooperation: Jacques Cheminade, former French Presidential candidate, presented “A Vision for Europe in Asia”; and Prof. Theodore Katsanevas of the University of Piraeus in Greece, gave a stirring presentation on why Greece and the other southern European nations should leave the euro system without delay.

Yet, without a breakthrough in the U.S.A. on Glass-Steagall, there is little chance of creating a future for humanity as a whole. In National, you will find the battle report on the Glass-Steagall fight in the U.S. that Diane Sare of the LaRouche Policy Committee delivered to the conference, along with greetings and messages from Rep. Walter Jones, and South Dakota State Rep. Patty Miller.
