

least. It is exemplified by that section of West Point graduates associated with President Polk's war with Mexico, which supplied the core of the military organization for the Confederacy. With a deeper probing of that aspect of our national history, the stink grows worse; the Confederacy's adopted tradition of the Swiss mercenary Jomini, reflects Jomini's association with and against Napoleon Bonaparte. Jomini is an expression of the Martinist/Synarchist freemasonic cult which conducted the French Revolution of July 14, 1789 through 1815; of Napoleon III; of Spanish Carlism; all the way through such creatures as Mussolini, Hitler, Franco, et al., and the U.S. and Israeli neo-conservatives of today. The Confederacy was a fascist dictatorship; it was the ideology of Napoleon Bonaparte's family and veterans in the U.S.A., and the coincident influence of Murat, all of which played a crucial direct role as participation in both the Confederacy and the filibustering operations preceding it.

Lincoln's mobilization for war is a reflection of the principles of strategic defense. General MacArthur's direction of the war in the Pacific is—apart from errors which had a contrary direction, such as the unnecessary assault on Iwo Jima—the most brilliant case-history of the military-strategic applications of the principles of strategic defense during my lifetime.

The concept of strategic defense took root in France in the roles of Cardinal Mazarin and Jean-Baptiste Colbert; in Mazarin's leading role in bringing about the 1648 Treaty of Westphalia; and Colbert's opposition, as a great economic nation-builder, to the Fronde-ist follies of that virtual Mithra-cultist "Sun King" Louis XIV, who prefigured the imperial tyranny of Bonaparte.

Vauban was notable for Monge's pupil Carnot as an example of the method of strategic defense applied successfully by Vauban during the wars of Louis XIV. I have walked through the fortress city of Neuf Breisach; for the technology of artillery in use during the early Eighteenth Century, the city, still intact and functioning, was an exemplary work of genius in application of strategic defense. Those two Vauban fortresses in Southeastern France prevented the Austrian penetration of France during that time, and supplied the most formidable resistance to the Prussian-German forces during the Franco-Prussian War. The Maginot Line, as originally conceived—but misused by the foolish French command later—was a reflection of the exemplary work on strategic defense of Vauban and Carnot.

Now, with the advent of nuclear and comparable technology, the conception of warfare should have undergone a revolutionary change from that of modern history until 1940-42 (e.g., Stalingrad). World War II was fought and won, in both Europe and the Pacific, by the Anglo-American-Soviet allies through application of the kind of strategic defense expressed by the successfully applied design, by von Wolzo-
